Revolutionizing the future of data for retailers to enhance the consumer journey

According to the National Retail Federation (NRF) in 2019, despite the narrative that retail is a dying industry, it's undergoing quite a transformation:

- Retail sales have grown almost 4% annually since 2010
- Of the top 50 online retailers, nearly all operate stores
- Industry-wide, online sales make up 10% of all retail sales
- Retail sales in 2019 will increase between 3.8% and 4.4% to more than $3.8 trillion

In-store and online shopping, app-based purchases, e-mail marketing, loyalty programs and more offer retailers countless opportunities to connect with and engage consumers. But retailers can run into trouble if they have siloed, disparate or poor-quality data, the wrong message and/or channels, or aren't measuring or optimizing their campaigns.

Becoming customer centric requires a strategic, cultural shift in the way most traditional retail organizations operate, and many retailers don't have basic omnichannel capabilities in place. A one-to-one customer relationship is key, which means it's important to resolve fragmented data and create a complete picture of the consumer to speak to them on every level. The goal is to earn their loyalty through personalized, relevant and targeted communication, but you can't do that without quality data, and a data-driven strategy.

Here are some examples of how retailers have leveraged our solutions to help them grow

Large Women's Clothing Retailer

When looking for opportunities to reactivate lapsed customers, a large women's clothing retailer reached out to us for support. We helped them silo consumer information based on how long they'd lapsed, then created response models to reach them based on demographics and behavioral attributes in conjunction with prior purchase history. By combining both models to create a Reactivation Matrix, we were able to gain a profile of lapsed consumers to ensure targeting to those most likely to reactivate, and focus content that appealed to each profile.

Major Discount Department Store

One major discount department store wanted to identify groupings of their loyalty customer base and profile those segments to guide their marketing strategy, differentiating between customers and their respective purchase patterns. We helped them identify eight distinct customer personas using transactional and ConsumerView data. Using this information, we were able to focus prospect efforts on migrating customers into core segments.
